Making the Most out of being an affiliate

Below are some tips on opportunities to provide click through's as referrals.

#1. Write an honest, detailed review of my e-course(s)

This is one of the best ways to refer people using your affiliate links as reviews and referrals are probably the deciding point when people are on the fence about purchasing something. So please do write an honest review and only if you indeed believe in this product yourself. To help your reviews rank higher in google, be sure to put the word review in the title and also the name of the product. Put the word "review" in the first sentence of your post also. It's also helpful to include the authors name too. Some examples:

Louise Gale | Dream-Inspire-Create | <http://louisegale.com>

- My review of Louise Gales [Big Dreams, Small Wonders] e-course
- Want to Create a Road Map to your Dream Life? Here's my review of Big Dreams Small Wonders by Louise Gale
- I'm going to be Dreaming Big and Celebrating the Small Wonders with Louise Gales new ecourse, here's a taster.

#2. Interview me on your blog.

I'd love to do a handful of interviews where you can also ask questions you think would help others understand the benefit and hear/read first hand about what my ecourses and products will offer. I will also add links to your blog from mine, facebook & tweet about the interview to send traffic your way too.

#3. Take a look through the course outlines

Identify a few areas you already know about or have been interested in and would love to blog about, use your blog posts as a way to refer to my products and also chat about the benefits and relevancy.

#4. Add links to all of your communication channels

Include a short description and badge in your newsletter/email out to your contacts, add to your blog/website and occasionally tweet about it or post to your facebook pages if you have them. When using social media though, try not to just add the affiliate link (or the tinyurl), think about starting a conversation or linking to your review of the product or using some text & linking. People then won't feel like you are just selling to them, but providing some valuable information.

#5. Write a real-time account of your experience with the ecourse.

As blogs provide a great insight to the growth and experiences of the author, if you are taking any of my ecourses, why not write your real-life account of how you are doing whilst working through it. You can post multiple times about the products (with affiliate links) and also provide credibility as you are working through them and experiencing them yourself. Don't worry about being truly honest, if there's something that isn't working so well for you, it's good to share and spark discussion on the topic.

#6. Link from your blog whenever appropriate.

Obviously you don't want to be seen as pushy or overly promoting these products because you are an affiliate, but if you see an opportunity to mention any of the products or any aspect of what they cover, please do so. When you bring up the product, be sure to include keywords relevant for google when you create the link. i.e.

Rather than:

For more information, you can read my review of Big Dreams, Small Wonders here

This is because google will identify relevance of the link and its keywords. (not much can be relevant about the word “here”)
